Third-party funding in international arbitration

Zachary D Krug, Adam Erusalimsky, Charlie Morris and Helena Eatock
Woodsford

While international arbitration spans multiple types of claims, overlapping jurisdictions and legal regimes, there are some commonalities to consider it an appropriate subject for a brief addendum within this guidebook's framework. A practitioner considering a transaction involving third-party funding of international arbitration will need to consider multiple potentially relevant jurisdictions. For example, one might need to consider the applicable arbitral rules (if any), the law of the seat of the arbitration, the governing law of the underlying agreements, any applicable international treaties, the law of the jurisdiction in which the award will be enforced, and, potentially, the law of the parties' counsels' home jurisdictions. Accordingly, this addendum is necessarily limited and endeavours to highlight some of the issues and approaches that are common in the context of third-party funding and international arbitration.

Prime among these commonalities is the tremendous uptake of third-party funding in international arbitration in recent times, regardless of claim type or venue. This is hardly surprising: international arbitration generally involves complex commercial disputes with sophisticated counsel at premier international law firms. The resulting fee burden can be substantial. Moreover, many international arbitrations involve claimants who are capital constrained (often as a direct result of a respondent's conduct) and would not be in a position to have their claims heard in the absence of third-party funding.

Third-party funding is an increasingly routine part of the landscape of international arbitration. Anecdotally, our experience speaking with claimants, practitioners and others who are frequently involved in international arbitration suggests that most claimants involved in larger international arbitrations are either being funded or have, at some stage of the process, considered using funding. What little public data is available tends to confirm this trend. As an example, when the International Centre for Settlement of Investment Disputes (ICSID) proposed updated rules on a variety of key topics, it included new rules on third-party funding because it had noted an 'increased resort' to funding, with at least 20 recent ICSID cases involving third-party funding. That number has likely grown substantially. Likewise, in March 2020, the European Commission published a draft proposal to amend the Energy Charter Treaty, which included new provisions requiring the disclosure of third-party funding. Similarly, we understand a number of bilateral investment treaties texts under negotiation also include specific provisions on funding.

Growing recognition of the use of funding in international arbitration

Concomitant with the increased use and availability of funding generally, there has been a gradual easing of the traditional doctrines of champerty and maintenance, which typically exist in common law (rather than civil law) jurisdictions. As is well covered in the country-specific chapters of this guide, this trend is occurring rapidly in a number of jurisdictions globally. For arbitration, this is potentially significant given that the law of the arbitral seat is most likely to govern whether or not a claimant is permitted to avail itself of funding.

Indeed, certain jurisdictions, notably Singapore and Hong Kong, have introduced legislation to expressly allow third-party funding of international arbitration. In 2017, Singapore's parliament passed the Civil Law Amendment Act and the Civil Law (Third-Party Funding) Regulations 2017, which effectively abolish the common law torts of champerty and maintenance, and permit third-party funding in respect of international arbitration and associated proceedings (eg, enforcement and mediation proceedings). In addition to the legislative provisions, the Singapore Institute of Arbitrators has introduced a set of guidelines for third-party funding, with which funders will be expected to comply. It is also anticipated that the key arbitral institutions, such as Singapore International Arbitration Centre (SIAC), will amend their rules to accommodate the new legislative provisions (indeed, SIAC has already addressed third-party funding in the first edition of its Investment Arbitration Rules).

In 2013, Hong Kong's Law Reform Commission launched a public consultation on whether to permit third-party funding for international arbitration seated in Hong Kong. This culminated in October 2016 with a recommendation to allow it. Following approval of the Arbitration and Mediation Legislation (Third-Party Funding) (Amendment) Bill 2017, the Arbitration Ordinance was amended to provide, in summary, that the doctrines of champerty and maintenance no longer apply to third-party funding of arbitration or related court or mediation proceedings. Interestingly, unlike in Singapore, no distinction is made in Hong Kong between domestic and international arbitration; funding will be permitted in both. Along with the amendments, a code of practice has been promulgated that regulates a funder's conduct on a variety of matters, including capital adequacy, disclosure and the funding agreement.

The trend has expanded to other jurisdictions. In Nigeria, for example, where recent amendments to the Nigerian Arbitration and Conciliation Act have been passed that would allow the costs of obtaining third-party funding to be included in the arbitration costs.

Nevertheless, some jurisdictions have been more hesitant when it comes to the current legacy of champerty and maintenance restrictions. In May 2017, delivering the judgment for Persona Digital Telephony Ltd v The Minister for Public Enterprise [2017] IESC 27, the Supreme Court of Ireland ruled the common law prohibitions on maintenance and champerty remain in force in Ireland, thereby restricting the availability of third-party funding. While the Persona decision did not itself address international arbitration, the court's decision will have implications for an arbitration seated in Ireland or if an arbitral award were to be enforced in Ireland.

By contrast, in civil law jurisdictions – which did not inherit the common law’s restrictions on maintenance and champerty, and have long permitted the alienation of litigation rights in some form – there has been predictably little discussion of the permissibility of funding whether in arbitration or litigation. That will likely soon change, given the substantial use of arbitration in many civil law countries, for example, in Latin America. In this vein, the Centre for Arbitration and Mediation of the Chamber of Commerce Brazil-Canada (CAM-CCBC), a leading arbitration centre in Brazil, became the first arbitral centre in the region to affirmatively address the use of third-party funding, issuing guidelines regarding the disclosure of funding arrangements.

In 2018, the long expected International Council for Commercial Arbitration (ICCA) Queen Mary Task Force on Third-Party Funding issued its final Report on Third-Party Funding in International Arbitration, ICCA Report No. 4 (April 2018). Expansive in scope, the report covers a range of important topics on third-party funding from a variety of angles, and serves as a useful resource for consideration of the relevant issues and current precedents from both international and domestic sources. Further, the Task Force issued a set of Principles and Best Practices, which attempted to distil the overall conclusions of the committee.

Disclosure and conflicts of interest

A topic of substantial discussion in the international arbitration community has been the potential for conflicts to arise in funded cases, and whether disclosure of the fact that a party is funded and, if so, the identity of the funder is necessary to prevent such conflicts. While the same discussion has arisen in the context of litigation, the issue is perhaps more acute in the context of international arbitration, because the parties have a role in appointing arbitrators, and there is a relatively small pool of practitioners who act as both arbitrators and advocates, who themselves may be involved in funded matters. (See ICCA Report, chapter 4.)

After some healthy debate, a consensus has begun to emerge that the disclosure of a party’s funded status and the identity of the funder (but not of the terms of the funding arrangement) in an arbitration may be beneficial so as to avoid potential conflicts. Accordingly, in the last several years, a number of jurisdictions, arbitral institutions and organisations have offered specific rules of guidance on this matter, summaries of which follow.

ICSID proposed rules

In 2018, ICSID published a set of proposed changes designed to modernise its rules, offering states and investors an improved range of dispute settlement mechanisms. Since then, the proposed rules have been subject to comment and undergone a series of further revisions, most recently discussed in ICSID Working Paper No. 4 (February 2020). As regards funding, the proposed rules would make it compulsory for parties to file a written notice identifying the existence of funding at any stage in the proceedings. Importantly, disclosure is limited to use of funding and the identity of the funder. The proposed rules also define funding for disclosure purposes to include donation and grant-originated funding. The discussion of the proposed rule in ICSID Working Paper No. 3 (August 2019) noted that the proposed rules do not contemplate ‘further right to information or disclosure of the agreement’, while noting that a tribunal has the power to order such disclosure where appropriate. This is consistent with ICSID Working Paper No. 4 (February 2020).

International Chamber of Commerce

The International Chamber of Commerce (ICC) International Court of Arbitration addressed the issue of potential conflicts in its 2017 Note to Parties and Arbitral Tribunals on the Conduct of the Arbitration (October 2017) (paragraph 24), which noted, among other things, that ‘relationships with any entity having a direct economic interest in the dispute or an obligation to indemnify a party for the award, should also be considered in the circumstances of each case’.

Singapore International Arbitration Centre

The SIAC’s Investment Arbitration Rules (IARs) specifically allow arbitral tribunals to order disclosure of the existence of third-party funding and the identity of such a funder (IAR 24(1)).

Hong Kong International Arbitration Centre

New article 44.1 of the Hong Kong International Arbitration Centre (HKIAC) rules came into force on 1 November 2018. These echo the requirement, in section 98U of the Arbitration Ordinance in Hong Kong, that if a funding agreement is made, the funded party must give written notice of the fact that a funding agreement has been made and just disclose the identity of the third-party funder.

China International Economic and Trade Commission

The China International Economic and Trade Commission (CIETAC) mandates disclosure of third-party funding pursuant to article 27 of its International Arbitration Investment Rules (2017). Specifically, the rule provides that ‘as soon as a third-party funding arrangement is concluded’ the funded party ‘shall notify in writing’ and ‘without delay’ the tribunal and other parties. Such a disclosure must provide the ‘existence and nature’ of the funding arrangement and the identity of the funder. Moreover, the rules provide the tribunal shall have the power to order further disclosure as appropriate.

Centre for Arbitration and Mediation of the Chamber of Commerce Brazil-Canada

CAM-CCBC’s Administrative Resolution No. 18 (2016) ‘recommends’ the parties disclose the use of funding ‘at the earliest opportunity’.

ICCA – Queen Mary Task Force Principles

The Task Force Principles of the ICCA state that a party ‘should’ voluntarily disclose the existence of funding, and that arbitral institutions have the authority to request disclosure.

IBA

The International Bar Association (IBA) was the first organisation to take a position on funding, when it published the 2014 IBA Guidelines on Conflicts of Interest in International Arbitration. The IBA Guidelines state that parties shall disclose ‘any relationship, direct or indirect, between the arbitrator and any person or entity with a direct economic interest in, or a duty to indemnify a party for, the award to be rendered in the arbitration’.

Nevertheless, such disclosure obligations should be narrowly limited to their intended purpose of avoiding conflicts, rather than an opportunity for distraction, delay or satellite litigation regarding, for example, disclosure of the terms of a funding agreement or waiver of privilege or confidentiality. As ICSID’s comments to the proposed rule make clear that its proposed disclosure requirement ‘does not create a general duty to disclose the terms of funding or the agreement itself’ as ‘this more elaborate information is not required to achieve the objective of preventing conflicts of interest’.

EU proposals in respect of the Energy Charter Treaty

The EU’s proposed reform of the Energy Charter Treaty would require disclosure of third-party funding. The proposal states that the party benefiting from third-party funding must notify both the tribunal and the other party of the name and address of the third-party funder, as well as its beneficial owner.

Confidentiality and privilege

Another issue that has frequently arisen in domestic litigation in various jurisdictions around the world is whether a claimant's sharing of confidential and privileged information with a funder might raise issues of waiver. Parties to arbitrations are similarly mindful of the issue.

Arbitration is commonly a confidential process between the parties to the arbitration. However, the emerging consensus is that the sharing of information with a funder pursuant to a non-disclosure agreement will not result in a waiver. That said, an arbitral tribunal often has wide discretion to determine the scope of material admitted into the proceedings and application of privilege is generally determined by resort to the relevant law of the seat of the arbitration (or potentially the substantive law of the dispute).

The rules of the major arbitral institutions do not yet, for the most part, address this issue expressly. However, the HKIAC new rules, which are based on section 98 of the Arbitration Ordinance, expressly permits the sharing of confidential information to a person for the purposes of having, or seeking, third-party funding of arbitration (article 45.3(e)).

Similarly, the Task Force Principles provide that although the existence of funding is not itself privileged, the underlying provisions of a funding agreement may be privileged and should only be ordered disclosed in 'exceptional circumstances'. Moreover, the Task Force Principles note the disclosure of information between a party and a funder should not be a basis for privilege waiver. Further, as the comments to ICSID's proposed rules noted at the time the proposals were being considered, parties should be able to seek appropriate confidentiality protections on privilege in the context of disclosure.

Ultimately, while we predict that concerns over waiver will fade, those contemplating funding should still ensure that all communications with funders are made pursuant to non-disclosure agreements.

Third-party funding and costs in international arbitration

Another important issue is the impact of third-party funding, if any, in the allocation of costs and related costs orders.

While arbitral panels generally have wide discretion in the allocation of costs, the principle of 'costs shifting' (ie, the loser pays the winner's costs) is prevalent in arbitration in numerous jurisdictions. In general, the fact that a prevailing party has been funded has not been deemed relevant as a basis to deny the recovery of costs. (See Kardassopoulos and Fuchs v The Republic of Georgia (ICSID Case Nos. ARB/05/18 and ARB/07/15), Award (3 March 2010); RSM Production Corporation v Grenada (ICSID Case No. ARB/05/14), Decision on Costs (28 April 2011).)

Significantly, particularly in circumstances involving improper conduct on the part of the respondent, a funded claimant may be able to recover not only the costs of the arbitration but also the premium or success fee paid to the funder. For example, in Essar Oilfield Services Ltd v Norscot Rig Management Pvt Ltd [2016] EWHC 2361 (Comm), the English High Court, which had supervisory jurisdiction, reviewed the decision made in an ICC arbitration seated in London to award the claimant (Norscot) not only its legal costs of the arbitration, but also the cost of paying the funder, Woodsford, the funding's 'success fee' on the basis that the respondent had caused the claimant's impecuniosity and effectively 'forced' it to seek funding. The respondent challenged the award on the basis that the arbitrator erred in concluding that he had jurisdiction to award such costs as 'other costs', but the English High Court upheld the award.

A further important issue is the relevance, if any, of third-party funding in connection with a tribunal's consideration of security for costs applications. While each jurisdiction or tribunal has different rules that apply to such applications, in general, unless a tribunal establishes a likelihood that costs could, in principle, be awarded against an unsuccessful claimant, it cannot make a decision on security for costs applications. Moreover, a tribunal will often lack the jurisdiction to make an order for security for costs against a funder that is not party to the arbitration agreement.

Respondents seeking a security for costs application sometimes argue that the fact that a party has sought funding is evidence of impecuniosity or that it will render it less likely to be able to satisfy an award of costs in the event the claim fails. But third-party funding is frequently used by parties that are solvent and, in any event, such funding is generally provided on a non-recourse basis and therefore does not compromise a party's financial position if the claim is lost. As such, there is a growing consensus, particularly in investor-state arbitration, that the mere fact a party has obtained third-party funding is not, by itself, a reason to justify a security for costs order. (See EuroGas Inc and Belmont Resources Inc v Slovak Republic, (ICSID Case No. ARB/14/14), Procedural Order No. 3 (23 June 2015); South American Silver Limited v The Plurinational State of Bolivia, (UNCITRAL, PCA Case No. 2013-15), Procedural Order No. 10 (11 January 2016); Guaracachi & Rurelec v Bolivia, (UNCITRAL, PCA Case No. 2011-17), Procedural Order No. 14 (11 March 2013).) However, in two 'exceptional' matters, the existence of third-party funding has been an important – but not the sole – factor in the ultimate decision to order security for costs. In RSM Production Corporation v Saint Lucia (ICSID Case No. ARB/12/10), the tribunal made an order for security for costs, apparently on the basis of the claimant's poor conduct during the course of the arbitration (including, for example, repeated failures to comply with the tribunal's orders). (See also Manuel García Armas et al v Venezuela (PCA Case No. 2016-08), Procedural Order No. 9 (20 June 2018).) There is reason to suggest that RSM and García Armas may be relatively isolated cases.

Consistent with these decisions, under ICSID's proposed rules amendments, it is contemplated that a tribunal 'may consider' with regard to a party's ability to pay a costs order, but expressly cautions that 'the existence of third-party funding by itself is not sufficient to justify' a security for costs order.
